Greetings President Meron,

I am writing to you today in the name of humanity and justice, and on behalf of all of the victims of the 1994 Genocide Against the Tutsi in Rwanda. I would like to humbly implore you not to release Hassan Ngeze, Dominique Ntawukuriryayo, and Aloys Simba. Doing so would be an affront to justice, and to all of those who perished and survived the atrocities that these men sent forth.

All three were instrumental in the brutal slaughter of innocent civilians: men, women, and children. So very many children... Their deeds were more than participation in and provocation to murder. The Tutsi people, and the few who protected them, were met with slow, tortuous demises. Their surviving kindred still suffer to this day. Physical scars are the very least of their problems; on the contrary, the mental and emotional wounds beset them each and every day. Nightmares plague them. Living a "normal" life is a daily struggle. And so, the horror that Ngeze, Ntawukuriryayo, and Simba perpetrated lives on in our current reality.

The ineffable crimes that these individuals committed warrant a life of confinement. Their acts were so egregious that letting them enjoy the rest of their lives as they wish would be a stain on all sense of fairness and equity. Put simply, they do not deserve any appeal. I cannot understand what grounds would possibly be considered to justify their early release. Even if these criminals had expressed remorse and regret, which they have not, their acts would still be beyond reproach.

I plead with you, as a fellow American, please deny these appeals. It shames me that our country stood by as the blood of innocents drowned an entire country.

Somalia or no Somalia; we could have stopped this genocide. The very least we can do is assure that those responsible for a million deaths, and the continued suffering of millions more, remain penalized. Those Rwandans still walking this earth contend with enough; let us not add to their daily struggles by awarding freedom to these men.

I offer sincere thanks for your time and your consideration of my plea.

Yours,
Kelly Ann Ryan
